Showing appreciation

Students at Claremore High School have been watching the new Claremore Performing Arts Center construction with much anticipation. Student representatives from the band, choir, drama and student government departments took coffee, doughnuts and thank you signs to workers this past week to show appreciation for their hard work. A school mascot flag was presented and is now flying above the project. Frank Robson, who is the major donor for the project, was on hand to speak with construction workers, including Mike Friedman, the job foreman. CHS choir director Linda Pollock, counselor Phyllis Hess and Principal Roger Crutchfield also were in attendance. Lynn Crockett (center), CHS administrative assistant, served coffee to a construction crew member.
